

Graduate Training and Research Opportunity in Paris

Are you interested in population flows across the globe, the reception and regulations of immigrants across time and space, and on developing new methodologies to study such movements? Let us tell you about an exciting seminar that Professor Jim Hevia, the director of International Studies, and Professor Ramón Gutiérrez, the director of the Center for the Study of Race, Politics and Culture, are trying to organize, which if funded, will run from 2012-2015. We hope that you may be interested and willing to join us.

With colleagues at the Université Paris Diderot in Paris, France we have been working to organize a three year graduate training and research project on the themes of "Mobilities, Circulation and Regulation", which will bring together a team of approximately 15 faculty and graduate students from the University of Chicago with a similar group from Université Paris Diderot. Yearly we will teach a seminar in which you would enroll and gain UC credit. Likewise there would be a yearly conference and publication to present your research, along with summer funding of research exchanges. All your transportation and subvention costs would be covered. In year one of the grant, in 2012-13, for example, 10 French graduate students would come to Chicago to join our ten-week seminar on methodology. For that year's conference we would take our graduate students to Paris. And in the summer we would send some of our students to do research in Paris and some of their team would come to Chicago, again with all expenses paid. Year two will be organized around the themes of population circulations and receptions, and would be similarly structured around a workshop, seminar, conference and student exchanges. Followed in the third year with similar exchange mechanics, focused on the theme of population regulation.

Interested? Send us a one-page (single-spaced) statement of interest by July 1, 2011, in which you us about your research interest in these themes, your disciplinary focus, how far along you are in your doctoral program. We clearly understand that some graduate students may only be able to participate for one or two years; that fine. We also anticipate that new members would join the project in year 2 & 3.
